

360 JUSTICE

AN INTEGRATED, INFORMED APPROACH

A TRUE PARTNER IN JUSTICE

The saying “knowledge is power” has never been more true than it is today. If we don’t know the answer to a question, we turn to Google. We read countless product reviews before committing to a purchase and scan dozens of ratings on Yelp before deciding where to eat. We want to hear from those who have ‘done it’, ‘been there’, ‘tried that’, because even in such mundane daily decisions, we see value in firsthand experience.

When it comes to larger, more important decisions like hiring a justice consultant or selecting an architecture firm for a new jail or courthouse, firsthand experience is no longer just a luxury – it’s a necessity. Firms are required to provide proof of their criminal justice work, and rightfully so. But Facility Owners can, and should, demand so much more. The best way for Owners to achieve maximum value is to demand an integrated, informed approach to justice.

laying the foundation

Facilities, new or renovated, most often result from a planning study, from as broad a viewpoint as a master plan, a needs assessment, or simply from a desire to replace an obsolete facility. Through the use of tools like operational and staffing analyses, statistical projections, facility conditions assessments, and stakeholder interviews, our planning experts identify the physical, operational, and aspirational benefits that the new building should provide. Creating this fully defined context of vision, mission, and operations is vital to the creation of a truly holistic approach to justice facility development.

DESIGN

applying best practices

Equipped with the context and insight gained during the planning stage, our designers use current and emerging best practices in criminal justice as a lens to view vision, mission, and operations in a fresh, forward looking light. These best practices – such as direct supervision, alternatives to incarceration, deflection/diversion/detention, and trauma-informed operations – have profound influence on design. Our experts have worked in and alongside criminal justice agencies, dedicating their careers to understanding the complexities and unique nature of the criminal justice system. Their involvement in, and access to, research and innovations taking place in both academic and practitioner settings provides a rich resource to our clients seeking to improve the effectiveness of their justice services.

PROGRAM MANAGEMENT

leading the way

When serving as an owner's representative, our staff truly becomes an extension of your team, advocating for your needs and assuming responsibility of the successful completion of your justice project. Program management directly affects the implementation of design, so we make it a priority to maintain open lines of communication between the owner, architects, and contractors 24/7. Our approach to owner's representation and program management focuses on state-of-the-art technical methods combined with personal involvement, which allows our project managers to build on-site relationships while keeping the entire project team up to speed. Using project management technology and our staff of experts, who are proficient in all disciplines related to justice projects, our involvement in your project guarantees that the right team is assembled to reach your desired goals and objectives, every time.

MAINTENANCE

ensuring efficiency

Representing the facility operations needs of a modern high performance building during the facility development process requires the active participation of staff with the skills to interact with the planners, designers, and owners in a way that is aligned with the big picture for the project. Delivering a building that over its lifetime is low in energy and resource consumption, healthful and uplifting to occupy, and durable for generations requires staff equipped with the tools, training and motivation to effectively realize the vision.

Our facility maintenance capability is robust, sophisticated, and experienced with the unique aspects of justice projects. The capabilities for insight into the long-term consequences of building systems, detailing and materials choices are a valuable asset to public owners, and an important resource to planners and designers.

A 360° APPROACH TO JUSTICE

how it all comes together

We pride ourselves on our dedication to improving the justice system, combining our expertise in the core disciplines of planning, design, and facility maintenance with more than 40 years of experience in the justice market to introduce best practices that are
